Binary / Triadic(?) orientation of object / subject. (subjective objective)

a material (or actual?) outcome can be, ^{retroactively?} ultimately, ascribed as adhering to a binary orientation of potential, whereas ~~and~~ the subject's interpretation/opinion (does it?) isn't necessarily binary, seeing as the subject can occupy the uncertain middle ground between "~~positively~~ yes" and "absolute no." ^{absolute} rather than superimposing this subjective orientation (non-binary) over the objective potential (binary), seeing as the latter cannot retain the ~~same~~ uncertainty as the former can, we all (?) seem inclined to adopt/conform to the binary orientation, abandoning our stance from the grey area to the nearest pole, a hasty process that may result in a feeling of processive/cognitive insufficiency, (finitude)

Example of non-binary subjective orientation:

to say that one is not certain of "A" in "A or B?" is not necessarily to say that one is positive of "B," but could say that one identifies in the middle.
